Mr. Reagan's first nationwide elevision address as president was a lengthy exhortation, free of much detail about his plans, aimed at building up support for an eco-nomic package he plans to present to Congress in detail Feb. 18.

Punctuating his points with a cascade of facts and figures designed to underscore the serious ness of the economic problems, Mr. Reagan called again for "a new beginning for America" and made clear that he meant to jettison much of traditional economic theory as well.

Among the measures he will ask Congress to pass, Mr. Reagan said, will be a request for a 10-percent cut in personal income tax rates for each of the next three years and a set of business tax breaks aimed at spurring investment, There were no details of the cuts

Mr. Reagan plans to seek in the budget, but the president's budget aides have suggested he will seek reductions of more than $13 billion in the current fiscal year and as much as $50 billion next year.

Giscard, Schmidt Warn Moscow Against Intervention in Poland

By Joseph Fitchett al Herald Tribune

PARIS - The leaders of France and West Germany warned Friday that a Soviet intervention in Poland would end detente, but Chancellor Helmut Schmidt reportedly declined to start drawing up a cat-alogue of Western reprisals to take if Moscow invades Poland.

To maintain East-West stability, Mr. Schmidt and President Valery Giscard d'Estaing said after a two-day summit meeting, the Soviet Union, like the West, should avoid seeking unilateral advantage. Their appeal for restraint appeared to be directed mainly to Moscow, and a balance of power was emphasized instead of detente. But the communique's undertones were aimed at more extreme members of President Reagan's admin-istration who have talked in terms of restoring an overall U.S. strate-gic preponderance by new nuclear and other military programs.

Second to None

While pledging whatever de-fense efforts are needed to maintain an East-West balance, the two men — using language described as deliberately ambiguous by a diplomat — deplored any attempt to start a new arms race or achieve military superiority. In private, Mr. Schmidt repeated his pre-ferred formula for desirable Western strength - "second to none," a conference source said. In an explicit warning to Moscow, the final communique said: "It is essential that Poland should be able to solve its serious problems on its own in a peaceful manner and without external interfer-

But in the talks, Mr. Schmidt reportedly was less pessimistic than Mr. Giscard d'Estaing about the degree of probability of a Soviet crackdown in Poland.

move in Poland. This difference in approach appeared to provide some confirmation for earlier press reports that Bonn and Paris did oot see eye to eye on Poland. At the time, West German and French officials vigorously denied these reports, occasionally denouncing them as U.S. inspired propaganda. But conference sources confirmed that a difference in approach on Po-land exists between the two men.

Nevertheless, both were careful to display a solid public front, partly to enhance the European bargaining position in the first contacts with the Reagan adminis-

Polish Regime Bows to Union, Ending Strike

w York Times Service BIELSKO-BIALA, Poland —
The 10-day strike that has gripped
this southern province ended Friday morning when the government agreed to accept the resignations of the provincial governor and three deputies.

Agreement was reached with the Solidarity labor movement after an hour and 45 minutes of talks that were mediated by the Roman Catholie Church. But it was, for all intents and purposes, concluded in Warsaw earlier Thursday. Bishop Bronislaw Dabrowski said it had been approved by Deputy Premier Stefan Barchikowski, PAP news agency confirmed that the agreement provided for changes in top posts in the Bielsko-Biala administration. It also reported on the state of negotiations in the province of Jelenia Gora, saying that basic agreement had been achieved on two out of three groups of demands, including the dismissal of some local officials.

But it said an impasse had been reached on the third -- demands that an official holiday bome be turned into a rehabilitation center and that a sanatorium being built for the Iracrior Ministry be handed over to the local hospital.

Strike Threat in Force

Solidarity's information service said Friday night the strike threat in Jelenia Gora for Monday was still in force, but added that workers there were expecting the arrival of a government commission.

Up to Friday, the government had refused to settle in Bielsko-Biala, arguing that the replacement of local personnel was a political issue. Its about-face represents a softening of its attitude loward Solidarity.

PAP reported that life was re-turning to normal in the Bielsko-Biala area, with all shops open and bus transport resuming service.

The strikers also won the promise of full pay during their protest. "Victory is full," said Mr. Walesa to the crowd of strike delegates, who raised their hands in approval.

Bishop Dabrowski himself, smiling broadly, announced the agreement to the strikers, assembled in the meeting hall of a woolen facto-"I asked that I could be the first to tell you," he said. Sources said that Solidarity had

Unresponsive

The protest was aimed at the dismissal of almost a dozen local government leaders. One reason why it was popular, and why Bielsko-Biala has defied a new national mood to talk instead of strike, may be found in the practices of Gov. Jozef Labudek. He is said to be unresponsive, high-handed and perhaps corrupt.

His office has been investigated more than once by the Polish government's watchdog agency, the Supreme Chamber of Control, without discernible results. Russia, Cuba Agreed to Supply Captured U.S. Arms to Salvadoran Rebels, Papers Say

By Juan de Onis

WASHINGTON - Secret documents captured from El Salvador's Marxist-led guerrillas that are considered authentic by U.S. intelligence agencies indicate that the Soviet Union and Cuba agreed last year to deliver tons of weapons to the guerrillas from stockpiles of U.S. arms taken over by Vietnam and Ethiopia.

Copies of the documents obtained by The New York Times include a report on a trip by a Salvadoran guerrilla, believed to be Shafik Handal, secretary-general of the Salvadoran Communist Party, to the Soviet Union, Vietnam, Ethiopia and Eastern European capitals where top-ranking party officials agreed to provide arms, uniforms and other military equipment for up to 10,000 guerrillas.

Arms Flow

During the last two months, in which the guerrillas of the Farabundo Marti Liberation Front unleashed an unsuccessful but largescale offensive, many of the arms captured by El Salvador's armed forces have been U.S.-made rifles, mortars and machine guns. There have also been Chinese-made weapons, as well as a variety of small arms available through commercial channels.

U.S. officials said they did not have information that showed the arms and supplies described in the document bad reached El Salvador. But State Department and Pentagon sources have said that there has been a flow of arms to the Salvadoran guerrillas in recent months that is believed to be coming, in part.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. said in his first press conference last week that the Soviet Union had been involved in "unprecedented risk-taking" in support of revolu-tionary movements in Latin America and Africa, using what Mr. Haig called "the Cuban

The documents captured in El Salvador by government security forces last month describe the extent of collaboracion between the Soviet Union and its allies in support of the Salva-doran guerrillas that has been approved at the highest levels of Communist leadership in East Europe and in Vieinam.

In one document, apparently written in Havana, the Salvadoran guerrilla reports on a visit to Hanoi June 9-15, 1980, in which he was received by Le Duan, secretary-general of the Vietnamese Communist Party, Xuan Thuy, vice president of the National Assembly, and Lt. Gen. Tran Van Quang, vice minister of de-

The report said the Vietnamese agreed to supply 60 tons of arms and ammunicion, mainly from weapons abandoned by U.S. and South Vietnamese forces. The list included

1,620 M-16 automatic rifles, 162 M-30 and 36 M-60 machine guns, 48 mortars, 12 and-tank rocket launchers, 1.5-million rounds of ammunition and 11,000 mortar rounds.

In Ethiopia, the report says the Salvadoran guerrilla met July 3-6 with Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam, president of the revolutionary council. The report said he was promised 150 submachine guns. 1,500 M-1 rifles, 1,000 M-14 rifles, and more than 600,000 rounds of ammunities.

The Ethiopian armed forces were supplied by the United States before the overthrow of Emperor Haile Selassie by revolutionary offi-cers opened the way to Soviet military influ-ence. The Ethiopian armed forces are now sup-plied almost entirely with Soviet and East European weapons.

The Salvadoran guerrilla leader reported that he visited Bulgaria, where he was received by Dimitur Stanishev, a secretary of the Communist Party Central Committee, who offered 300 submachine guns with 200,000 rounds. In Czechoslovakia, he reported that he had

In East Germany, the report said the emis-sary was received by Erich Honecker, the party chief and president, and Hermann Axen. party secretary for international relations. The re-port said they promised SI million in financial aid through a "committee of solidarity," but

In Moscow, where the report said the guerrilla emissary made two visits, first on June 2 before going to Vietnam, and another in July, the main topics were how to transport the arms to El Salvador.

Meetings were held with Karen Brutents, deputy chief of the Soviet Central Committee's department of internacional relations, and his deputy, Mikhail Kudashkin.

The report said the officials had agreed to give military training to 30 young Salvadoran Communists who were studying in the Soviet Union.

But the Salvadoran's report complained that he left Moscow without a firm decision on how the arms were to be shipped, whether by ship or air transport, and be complained that he had been unable to see Boris Ponomarev, the chief of the party's international relations deOn July 29, after reaching Havana, the emis-sary said he had been notified by the Soviet Embassy that the Soviet Communist Party's Central Committee wanted him to return for further talks in September or October.

The comrade expresed his concern that the lack of decision by the Soviets could affect not only the aid which they can give, but also that which has been offered by other parties of the European Socialist camp," the report said.

Another document, also written from Havana, refers to meetings that took place be-tween the Salvadoran guerrilla leader and Gustavo Carvajal Moreno, president of Mexico's ruling Revolucionary Institutional Party, who was in Cuba during a visit there by President Jose Lopez Portillo last year.

This document said the Salvadoran guerrilla was guest at a dinner given by Mr. Lopez Portillo for Fidel Castro. As a result of talks with Mr. Carvajal, the Salvadoran reported that Mexico had agreed to allow the poliocal front of the guerrillas to set up an office in Mexico

The report said Mr. Carvajal had offered to coordinate a front of Latin American political parties that would work against U.S. military intervention in El Salvador if the guerrillas overthrew the military-backed government of

Death Rate Decrease Slows in Third World

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — A major change has apparently begun in world death rates, ending decades of large and hopeful increases in life expectancy in Third World countries, according to a study by the Overseas Development Council.

Death rates have been declining rapidly since World War II, and the biggest gains have been in the Third World countries as they have improved their water, sewers and medical treatment.

But now, according to Davidson Gwatkin of the ODC, the decline in death rates has "begun to falter, to give way to a confused, diverse, ambiguous situation marked by unexpected slowdowns in the pace of bealth improvements"

The life expectancy in the developed world is now about 71 years compared with about 53 years in the Third World countries, Life expectancy in the developed world has begun to level off and is only increasing at the rate of .16 of a year annually. In the Third World, the expected increase in rate was .58 of a year annually, but the reported rate instead is now only .4.

Natural Ceiling

The rate of progress in combat-ing disease and malnutrition had been improving rapidly after World War II, up to the early 1960s. Projections by the United Nations and others suggested that the trend would continue as it had in Europe — continually improv-ing until the rate of improvement began to slow when life expectancy neared what is believed to be a natural ceiling between 73 and 80 years old. But instead, the Third World life expectancy rate may be leveling off 20 years below what it is in the Paisley Stages developed nations.

Life expectancies in the Third World were no more than 30 to 40 years of age before World War II, and in the two decades after the war life expectancy leaped upward at rates unprecedented in buman history, according to Mr. Gwatkin. The gain averaged more than one year of life expectancy per year and in some places two years were gained per year.

In Mauritius, for example, life expectancy jumped from 33 to 51 years between the war and 1953. But "none of the three major re-

Economic Reasons

The reasons Mr. Gwatkin gave for the unexpected failure to continue progress were that economic conditions have worsened and the kind of medical aid given by clinics in the Third World has a limited power to improve life expectan-

Although some major diseases such as smallpox have been eliminated, such commonplace killers as infant diarrhea, malnutrition and pneumonia still fail to be controlled by the limited medical re-sources in Third World countries.

Coincidentally, Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene and Public Health in Baltimore has announced a recently developed home method of preventing death from severe dehydration due to diarrhea. Johns Hopkins has recommended introducing the method on a massive scale in the Third World, where 4 to 6 million deaths, mainly among infants and children, are caused by dehydration due to diarrhea. The method, called Oral Rehydration Therapy, is published in detail in the current issue of Population Reports. The solution recommended for use includes salt, potassium chloride, baking soda, and sugar, dissolved in a liter of water. It is chemically designed to get the water to be absorbed in the body rather than passed through.

Parade of 500 Ulster Militants

The Associated Press BELFAST — Protestant leader Ian Paisley Friday staged a pre-dawn parade of 500 militants in protest at what he claimed were plans by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Irish Premier Charles Haughey to set up an all-Ireland republic.

Only a few hours later a police-man was shot and killed and another badly wounded by IRA gun-men in Belfast. Mr. Paisley, a Protestant minister and vociferous advocate of retaining Ulster's status within Britain, presented his followers - drawn up in military file and waving what be said were gun licenses — on a windswept hill about 30 miles northwest of Belfast to an invited group of journalists who were not told beforehand what was to bappen.

Mr. Paisley said he staged the demonstration to show Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher "she should not play with the lives and beritage of the Ulster Protestant people."

The party's executive committee named Mr. Calvo Sotelo as its choice for premier 24 hours after Mr. Suarez resigned. Dissidents in the party were committed in advance to veto the deputy premier, but his ratification is expected, nevertheless, at the close of the convention Sunday.

Honecker Ready to Improve Ties With Bonn

BERLIN - Communist leader Erich Honecker said Friday that East Germany was ready to improve its relations with Bonn, which have been seriously strained since East Berlin raised currency exchange levies for Western visitors in October.

"Possibilities for an improvement in relations certainly exist. That is clear from the fact alone that these relations are not as they should be at present," Mr. Honecker said in an interview with British publisher Robert Maxwell reported by the ADN news agency.

His remarks were the first sign that East Berlin was ready to ease its

Democrats Withhold Votes

On Thursday, more than 100 House Democrats withheld their votes until a majority of Republicans voted to increase the debt ceiling. In all, 150 of the 191 House Republicans voted for the measure, the largest Republican majority for a debt-ceiling increase in almost 28 years. A similar tactic was used by Democrats in the Senate with similar results.

To expedite final Senate passage of the increase, several senators withdrew proposed amendments to the bill, including one that would have barred all trade with the Soviet Union as long as the grain embargo is in effect. Sen. Roger Jepsen, R-lowa, told the Senate on Thursday that if the United States wants to use trade as a policy weapon, "all Americans — not just the 2 or 3 percent who are farmers — should share in it." Adoption of such an amendment would have forced the administration into almost immediate action on the embargo. Mr. Reagan and his Cabinet have been considering the issue, and sources have said the president is inclined to keep the embargo in force, at least for the immediate future.

The amendments would have mired the Senate in debate, and their adoption would have made necessary a conference with the House --- delaying approval of the debt-ceiling increase and endangering the government's cash flow.

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. - Pfc. Robert Russell Garwood has become the first official traitor in a divisive war that had few heroes. Freedom, after 14 years on the books as a POW, had been so close. Donna Long, a close friend's widow who took Pfc. Garwood into ber bome after a window was broken by his barracks bunk, sobbed quietly.

Pfc. Garwood faces up to life imprisonment on the collaboration charge and up to six months behind bars on the assault charge, as well as the loss of $147,000 in back pay, held in escrow and frozen by the U.S. Military Court of Claims. The jury that determined his guilt must now rule on his sentence, as is military custom. Col. Switzer earlier had ruled that Pfc. Garwood was not guilty of an additional three charges, including one of descrition.

The verdict, subject to automat-

Of 'Failed' Kissinger Trip and a brother and that the letter contained an excuse as to why he could not receive us, but that there was nothing negative in it." The WASHINGTON — William S. Paley, chairman of CRS Inc., has said he participated in a meeting held in Riyadh between Crown Prince Fahd and Henry A. Kissinger and said that be and Mr. Kissinger were received "with great enthusiasm and courtesy" by Prince Fahd and the other Arab rulers the two men met on a Middle East tour last month.

The Washington Post reported earlier this week in a dispatch from Jidda [published by the Interna-tional Herald Tribune on Wednesday] that Saudi and U.S. sources disputed statements by a Kissinger state had met with Prince Fahd. the day-to-day ruler of the desert kingdom. The reported dispute over the meeting was part of an ar-ticle that said Arab leaders had beld Mr. Kissinger at arm's length on the tour because of their uncertainty about his standing with the new Reagan administration.

The Saudi Information Office in Washington confirmed Thursday that Prince Fahd had met with Mr. Kissinger. In Saudi Arabia, the government continued to decline to respond to questions from The Washington Post as to whether the meeting had taken place and still has made no statement on Mr. Kissinger's visit beyond a terse description of it as "an exploratory visit by someone outside the administration."

Mr. Paley, who said he personalby picked up all the expenses for the trip, took sharp issue with the article's tone, saying he and Mr. Kissinger had been "received like royalty in every country we went in. The amount of attention we got was almost embarrassing, and when I read something that implies he was lonked on with suspicion, it makes me curl."

Respect and Trust

The CBS executive said he had sat in the meeting with Prince Fahd for about 90 minutes, after which Mr. Kissinger and the prince met privately for about the same period of time. The prince spoke very intelligently about the problems of the Middle East and has very good understanding of those problems," Mr. Paley said. "He showed great respect for and trust in Henry Kissinger."
Mr. Paley said he was not aware that the trip had not been men-tioned in the Saudi press and said he could not explain the reports, which originated within the royal family, that Prince Fahd had declined to see Mr. Kissinger. Those reports were echoed by U.S. officials in Washington.

Mr. Paley also put a different light on the refusal of Jordan's King Hussein to let Mr. Kissinger visit the kingdom. He confirmed the rejection, but said, "Henry told me Hussein had sent him a very warm letter calling him a friend

This is what prompted the Reagan administra-tion's request for Congress to raise the ceiling to $985.1 billion. The overall debt has increased inexorably because of deficits incurred by the federal government as it spends more than it receives in tax revenues. Kinds of Securities

The debt consists of various kinds of securities, including bills, notes and bonds, most of which are sold through public auctions. They have maturities (payoff periods) ranging from 13 weeks to 20 or 30 years. Investors such as large banks, insurance companies and securities dealers, in addition to individual citizens, buy these Treasury offerings. The other portion of the national debt consists of securities that cannot be bought and sold on the open market. The Treasury sells savings bonds to citizens and special securities to other branches of the government, such as the Social Security trust fund and the highway trust fund.

The revenues from Social Security taxes and the federal gasoline tax, held in special trust funds, are lent to the Treasury. In return, the trust funds get interest-bearing securities from the Treasury.

The public debt is a combination of all the money owed in all forms by the Treasury to individual citi-zens, financial institutions, and government trust funds, including interest on the money borrowed.

own people.

Poland careens from crisis to crisis. No sooner is one issue between the workers and the government settled than one, two, three more rise to take its place. Less than a week ago, for instance, the two sides agreed on a schedule for work-free Saturdays and on union access to the media. But because all battles over issues are surrogates for a continuing battle over power, the agreement merely led to conflict in new arenas.

The particular issue that now has Poland astir involves the government's new and restricting regulations on strike pay. Solidarity members see these regulations as a plot to erode the right to strike they had earlier gained.

What complicates the struggle on the workers' side is the lack of full discipline. Not only is there a spontaneous democratic spirit at the beart of Solidarity, this is the movement's strength and pride. Its leaders also lack the logistical and organizational means to fight their battles as effectively as

The officials are also using as a political weapon the charge that the workers' strikes, some of them organized and some of them wildcat, are damaging the economy. Narrowly, the charge is true, but it is grossly unfair to make it. It is the Communist system that bas done the basic damage to the Polish economy. Strikes are the workers' only real weapon. Undeniably, bowever, the charge against striking is not without a certain intimidating effect.

The Polish authorities claim that Solidarity is turning into a political party. WASHINGTON — Americans had better get used to the proposition that Social Security benefits will have to be trimmed in some manner, or the taxes paid into the system raised, because the Social Security trust fund otherwise will run out of money in the next couple of years.

It is a hard concept for liberal Democrats to accept. Social Security is one of the more enduring monuments of the New Deal, providing the cornerstone of income security programs for the elderly. Other industrialized countries with a similar concept face the same problem as the United States.

Robert W. Ball, who served the U.S. system for more than 20 years, likes to say that "Social Security is America's most successful program of social reform." And Mr. Ball argues against cutting benefit protection, recommending instead a tap on the general revenue pot, especially to cover a share of rising Medicare outlays.

f have a most touching personal letter on my desk from a 90-year-old Social Security beneficiary, F. A. Sieverman Jr. of Fayette, Ala. It hard to challenge. Mr. Sieverman cites the oppressive hurdens the aged and ailing must bear, and defuly notes that there are other places where the government could save money, notably "tax expendi-tures." The expression, of course, is a euphemism for subsidies to has developed a hasic law it didn't have when Mr. Sieverman first started collecting monthly checks:

Because the increase in inflation is ouistripping the increase in wages, the total benefits being paid out far exceed the total of taxes comin to support what was intended to be a pay-as-you-go system.

Costly Decision

Not anticipating double-digit inflation, economic stagnation and low productivity. a generous Con-gress in 1975 indexed the system to the Consumer Price Index. It was a costly decision: Since price hikes outran wages, Social Security beneficiaries were better protected than wage earners.

This dangerous development has taken place despite the fact the Social Security system now takes a bigger tax bite — 6.5 percent than do income taxes for more than half of the families in the United States.

In addition to the short-term problem, most experts think there is a long-term problem building. The number of aging and retired persons who are eligible for Social Security is zooming ahead faster than the number of people who work. Today, roughly three workers pay into the system for every one drawing benefits. By the year 2025, the ratio will shrink to 2-1.

Clearly, something has to give. Increasingly — if reluctantly — some liberals are coming to the notion that current benefit levels have to be reduced to assure a steady flow of payments to present retirees, as well as to give younger people paying into the system the confidence that when their turn comes to take something out the trust fund won't be empty.

The only real solution is for Congress to withdraw the over-

Time for Price Controls?

By Garry Wills

WASHINGTON — The inevitable comparisons of President Reagan's administration with Margaret Thatcher's in Britain can be read in various ways. It is said that Mrs. Thatcher is failing, so Mr. Reagan will fail.

But some point out that the United States has fewer governmental expenditures frozen in place than does Britain. Mrs. Thatcher's tight money policies cannot force retrenchment in areas where a legal commitment is already made and must stand despite the condition of the economy - e.g., health service, government employment contracts, etc. Tight money policies have not restored England's economy - what chance have they in the United States?

We should recognize that the U.S. economy has a high degree of controls already, to give security to individuals and industries and groups. Indexing goes on informally even where it is not legislated, Pensions, health plans, unemployment pay, aid to faltering industries, are guaranteed by political leverage. The consequence: A man who must pay his workers by law will borrow at exorbitant rates and hope not to go bankrupt tomorrow rather than refuse to pay and go bankrupt today, inflation, people will porrow for sale investments even at high rates, thus so people will not fall through as they did in the Depression.

We have a makeshift set of controls that grew up in response to con-stituent demands for security. We've put a high floor under the economy.

But we have no ceiling controls. Only half the accordion expands and contracts, and does that wildly in a fulle attempt to make the other half respond. It will not work. It could work only if we deliberately knowled work only if we deliberately knocked holes in the floor of our economy, to cause a depression, and that is politically unfeasible.

What is left? Obviously, to put controls on the rise in prices to match controls on the guarantee of income. Our house needs a ceiling as well as a floor. This is becoming so obvious that Robert Heilbroner has already predicted that even Mr. Reagan will be forced to see the logic of it and impose price controls in order to escape Jimmy Carter's fate. That will take considerable swallowing of all the free-market verbiage Mr. Reagan has churned out over the years. But one of his best gifts is self-contradiction. After all, even Mrs. Thatcher, a more consistent politician, is being weaned from her Friedmanism.

Similar savings, Mr. Levitan said, could be made in retirement pay for both civilian and military employees of the government. The civil service pension system is indexed twice a year - against once for Social Security and not at all for most private pension plans. Moreover, civil service pensions, which were designed to replace up to 70 percent of pre-retirement earnings, compared with 20 to 25 percent for private plans, are doing even better in this era of doubledigit inflation.

What can be done, without a sledgehammer, that will help re-store viability to the trust fund? Alice M. Rivlin, director of the Congressional Budget Office, list-ed the choices, and they are all

Late tast year the Khmer Rouge

The Khmer Rouge are still recognized by the United Nations. Among those who voted for them were Western countries whose diptomats had previously delivered withering attacks on Pol Pot in UN human rights meetings. It is worth restating this extraor-dinary contradiction in the aftermath of the visit to Thailand by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Vietnam's recent offer to meet with ASEAN to discuss the Cambodian deadlock.

Predictably, the Vietnamese of-fer was dismissed by China as a disguised attempt to win recognition for the Vietnam-backed regime in Phnom Penh.

Premier Zhao will also have played on Thailand's lears of Vietnamese expansionism during this visit. His statement to journalists that China may stop supporting Communist parties in ASEAN is designed to bold Indonesia and Malaysia (which fear Chinese-hacked subversion more than Vietnamese expansionism) in line be-hind Thailand and the Khmer

Rouge.

Thailand's fear of Vietoam is understandable, if exaggerated in the view of many. China's commit-ment to the Khmer Rouge is also nothing if not consistent, since they have always been a favored revolutionary client. But the West's diplomacy bas been thor-oughly discredited by falling meek-ly in line and allowing China to dictate its policy towards Cambodia.

What is the logic? Partly, it is a desire to belp ASEAN. Partly, too. Vietnam is seen as a Russian satellile and its 200,000 soldiers in Cambodia as agents of Russian mischief. This is not a time, goes the argument, to waver, with the Kremlin waiting to exploit any weakness over Afghanistan.

The logic of this may seem irre-futable. But in Cambodia it runs

Prince Norodom Sihanouk.
But no one who has visited the Thai border accepts this, The Khmer Rouge remain the only military alternative to Vietnam. If Vietnam withdraws as a precondition to elections, what would stop the Khmer Rouge sweeping back into Cambodia, battle-hardened and vengeful? Not a figurehead president, not UN observers, and certainly not the will-o'-the-wisp volunteer army of Heng Samrin.

In short, there is an opportunity in the Vietnamese offer, and it should be explored by the West, not spurned because China talks tough. This would be the best way to help ASEAN allies escape from the debilitating Cambodian im-

It might also begin to repair the damage caused by support for the Khmer Rouge, which is all the more inconsistent after President agan's attack on the Soviet Union for eucouraging terrorism. The Khmer Rouge were guilty of crimes against bumanity. They should be tried on the charge, not cosseted by the international community.

ways on the best-dressed list, struck up on his own in 1977 with a menswear boutique in New York. Located in the former Rolls Royce showrooms on 57th Street, it is more a couture house for men than another men's shop. A jet-setter who looks like the ultimate dandy, Oliver likes to say: "I wouldn't have anything in my store that I wouldn't wear myself. I wanted to create a lummy setting for lummy merchandise. The first one was CBS chairman William Paley, followed by Fiat tycoon Gianni Agnelli. fichael York, Kirk Douglas, Chut Eastwood and the Kennedys. Women such as Barbara Walters, Jackie Onassis and Lauren Bacall, have also learned the way into his deluxe store, where they buy the crew neck cashmere, also known as the status sweater, that comes in 42

Asked what he has contributed to the New York men's scene, Oliver, who has been known to wear white socks with purple pants, said: "Color." His shetland sweaters come in 35 colors, and his cashmere gloves and his scarves in 25 colors. Velvet pants also run the full 25-color gamut, and there is a choice of nine colors in the bathrobe department. Belis, too, come into all the colors of the rainbow, including turquoise and parma red.

Another vital factor is quality. No cheap skate, either in private or public life, Oliver, who has been compared to a Russian prince believes in everything real — real silk, real alpaca, real cashmere.

Gianni Versace — small, compact and ath-letic, with a strong black beard and soft eyes, he was once refused entrance to Maxim's because he was wearing a white T-shirt. Yet he has built an empire (as big as his women's line) on his menswear, which he started only five years ago.

"It really got going two years ago," he said.
Copied after his own looks, Versace's rugged men's clothes are "far modern men who are used to wearing country clothes into the city."
Leather is his signature and his new line recently shown in Milan includes a special hunter's look all made of leather.

ed, "including Paris, Los Angeles, London. f do two collections a year, which are produced in Hong Kong for the American market." His best market is Italy, followed by Europe and the United States. His most famous customers are from the show-business and sports world. They include Mick Jagger, Andy Warhol, Richard Gere, Dick Avedon and Vitas Gerulaitis. Unlike Oliver, he does not do much with colors, For him, it's black in winter and white for summer, Textures? "I like cashmere of course but also strong melanges, mixing tweed with cashmere and leather. There's always a loose touch to my clothes. They are never very tight or constricted, f always have big, loose, comfortable volumes." In short, the opposite of what is known all over the world as Italian skintight chic.

Roy Halston — High priest of fashion, in black turileneck sweater, black pants, black jacket and loafers, Halston works surrounded by white orchids and silver candlesticks in ultra-fancy Olympic Tower showrooms. He started as a hat designer in Paris 28 years ago but has now become the American status symbol designer. His clients and best friends include Liza Minnelli and Elizabeth Taylor

His menswear venture started about eight years ago, again because, over the years, "I liked doing things for friends, such as a giant sable hat for Rudolf [Nureyev].

He relates to his style, which he defines as simple. I'm easier and less complicated than most men. There was a great influence from Cardin, which caught on all over the world. It was shaped and dapper. But the big guy really wants a little more easy style, less stylish. It's a different attitude."

The success story of all time, with a $200million turnover and 28 companies belonging to Norton Simon, Halston confesses he is frustrated by the men's market. "I'm left wanting all the time," he said, "because they can't produce it. I'd like to have my own business. I have a dozen zip front jackets, for instance. It cost me $350. I'd have to sell it for $700. But American males won't spend the money for clothes the way American women do."

He said his dressing in solid black is no af-fectation. "It's because it's easier. I see thousands of colors a day. When you work in a place like this, you're in competition with your

by Paul Overy

EDBURGH, Scotland - Teaching has nften given writers, artists and musicians invaluable experience and self-confidence to produce their best work. Sometimes the teaching is all-consuming at the time and the creative period comes afterwards, in old age.

William Johnstone is an 83-year-old Scottish painter who was the principal of two of Lon-don's leading art colleges. Camberwell and the Central, just before and just after World War II. Impatient of educational bureaucracy, he retired early to farm sheep in his native Scot-tish Borders with his second wife and young daughter. His father had been a Border farmer and after returning from World War I John-stone had to tell him that he did not want to take over the family farm but was going in-stead to study to be an artist in Edinburgh.

Perhaps Johnstone's decision to take up sheep farming in his 60s came from a sense of debt to his dead father, perhaps from a need to recover his roots in the beautiful country in which he grew up. which he grew up.

The Scottish Borders were Britain's bandit country in earlier centuries, with clans and families waging war against each other as much as against the invading English from the south, Possibly it was this ancestry that gave Johnstone his blunt determination not to kowtow to anybody and his derisory scorn for the London art world which kept him from the London art world, which kept him from fashionable success in his middle years. Johnstone distrusted art dealers and even more the murky superstructure on which success as an artist is so often built in the big cosmopolitan centers of Europe and America.

Like Josef Albers - Bauhaus teacher and rector of Black Mountain College before be-coming Professor of Fine Art at Yale — John-stone entered his most creative period as an artist in his 70s and 80s. But whereas Albers' "Homage to the Square" series of paintings are calm and contemplative, Johnstone's late work is full of energy and gesture. Many have mistaken his work for that of a man in his 30s.

After leaving the Edinburgh College of Art, Johnstone won a Carnegie Traveling Scholarship and went to Paris in 1925. Here he studied under Andre Lhote, whose systematic and disciplined teaching be found helpful and stimulating. But it was the Spanish sculptor Julio Gonzalez who was the greatest influence on Johnstone at this time.

Johnstone went on a tour of Europe and North Africa with a young American, Max Bernd-Cohen, who had become his closest friend in Paris. He renewed his acquaintance with another American art student. Flora MacDonald, whom he had first met when she was studying at Edinburgh College of Art and who was now working in Bourdelle's sculpture class in Paris. In 1927, they were married in the British Consulate and soon returned to Scotland, where they lived in his father's house in Selkirk. Johnstone painted in an old army hut that he used as a studio. It was during this period that he began to produce his first mature works as an artist.

With the Depression things became very dif-ficult. His wife's family had lost a lot of money in America and was no longer able to help the Johnstones. Nevertheless, they set off for the United States, where after a number of casual jobs William got a temporary appointment at the California School of Arts and Crafts at Carmel. Most of the work Johnstone produced in California has been lost; but the experience was an important one, not least for his own work. Johnstone may have seen paintings by Arthur Dove and Georgia O'Keefe, although he does not remember having done so. Perhaps the slight similarines in his work of around this time come from the American ambience.

Johnstone - flowering in retirement.

rather than from seeing particular works. Cer-tainly Johnstone is rare among British artists of his generation in his interest in America.

After returning to England, Johnstone took teaching jobs in schools and evening institutes before he found work in art schools. Teaching was badly paid and exhausting, and with his wife and young daughter he had to take furnished rooms where there was little space to paint even if he had had the time. He was so involved with teaching that he painted little between 1931 and the outbreak of World War III. He became fascinated by the possibility of breaking down the rigid old traditions of art education. Johnstone believed in bringing out the innate creativity of his pupils by new and unusual methods and be was a pioneer of ideas about "education through art."

When he gave up teaching in 1960 to retire to a hill farm in Scotland many must have thought him mad ft took up much of his energy and left him little time for painting. But it did give him a new subject matter, or rather an old—the landscape and life he had known as a boy: animals, hills, the cycle of life, birth and death oo a farm. This is reflected in his paintings but not directly or realistically. These late paintings are abstract but powerfully convey the energy and structures of life and land-

In this last decade since he finally had to productive. Perhaps because this fertility has come late in life and so many earlier paintings are lost or painted over, he is reluctant to destroy or select from his recent work. The kind of energy which goes into his painting and drawing means that there are almost as many failures as successes. But the best of his paintings and ink drawings are extraordinary, using chance effects and gestural marks with great creative imagination.

Johnstone was always close to the Scottish nationalist poet Hugh MacDiarmid. As long ago as 1933 MacDiarmid had written poems based on Johnstone's early pictures. These were beautifully printed in a limited edition. Shortly before MacDiarmid's death in 1978, Johnstone produced a series of lithographic illustrations to some of his poems. illustrations to some of his poems.

Johnstone has recently finished a similar series of lithographs based on poems by the Scottish poet and translator Edwin Muir, which will be included in the retrospective exhibition organized by the Arts Council of Great Britain at the Hayward Gallery in Lon-don from Feb. 11 to March 12. The exhibit will also be presented at the Tolner Art Gallery in Eastbourne April II to May 17.

He got a staff job for the ABC network in New York and was featured for years on the Jimmy Dean show. He originated a new sound, whistling and guitar in unison. He whistled on many commercials, including one for Old Spice. His harmonica contributed to the atmosphere of such films as "Midnight Cowboy." "Sugarland Express" and "The Get-He recorded and toured with Paul Simon and Peggy Lee. He was often harmonica soloist on "Sesame Street" and you do not have to listen too hard to hear him on that long-running television show's theme music. Like so many jazz musicians who have been

when he had been Charlie Parker's puppy. Caucously at first, he entered the insecure but exciting world of jazz again. He played the Montreux Festival with Quincy Jones and Os-car Peterson, recorded with Bill Evans. When he appeared at Ronnie Scott's Club in 1978 with his own quartet, Derek Jewell wrote in the London Times: "This solidly built, bespectacled genius can make the simple old mouth organ weep... Fingering the guitar with his left hand, and holding his chromatic harmonica to mouth with his right, he got drummer Eddie Marshall to strum the guitar through a sophisticated version of Stevie Wonder's Isn't She Lovely? The audience, already overflow ing with goodwill, exploded after that feat."

Toots himself always seems to be overflowing with goodwill. Fifty-eight now, with thick glasses, be still breathes hard because of his asthma and paces himself slowly. When his first wife died of cancer three years ago be moved back to Brussels (while keeping his house in Montank, Long Island) and began taking regular work with a European quartet. He explains with his soft, melodious voice: "I had ten one-nighters in January; in Belgium, Holland and Germany. I slept at home every night. If I was bying in New York I would have had to be away almost the entire month. Family life has always been important to me and I'm very happy now with my new wife

His reputation is such that work now often comes to him. Weather Report bassist Jaco Pastorius just came to Brussels to make some tracks for his next LP with Toots. Quincy Jones sent a tape of an album in progress from Los Angeles with an elaborate set of instructions so that Toots could overdub it in Brussels.

"It's going just fine now," be smiles, hugging Hughette. "I'm unbelievably happy." Their Yorkshire terrier Duke Ellington begins to bark and Toots hugs him, too. He looks around his modern huxury apartment in Molenbeek, a comfortable suburt of Brussels, thinks about a coming vacation in his Montank house, adjusts his suspenders and smiles: "Not bad for a Belgian beloop harmonica play-

Isolated Lamu Works Magic on Visitors

by Nan Robertson

AMU, Kenya — It rises like n vision out of the sea, beautiful, white and centuries-old, as the Arab dhow hurries across the strait that separates the island and town of Lamu from the northeast coast of Kenya. The Somalia border is not far away.

There are no bridges or ferries, and vehicles must be left behind oo the mainland. Automo-biles and even bicycles are forbidden on Lamu except for the District Commissioner's Land Rover, which sits, preposterous and largely imused — for the town's streets are much too narrow — beneath a palm-frond canopy in front of his waterfront offices.

I could not believe the place when first I saw it, nor in the days that followed. The main adornment of the island of Lamu, which is six miles long and five miles wide, is the town of Lamu. Its 10,000 residents are mostly Moslem, and there are 23 little mosques. There are some restored houses and government offices, and a museum displays the local arts, crafts and history. The muezzins chant their call to prayer at the appointed hours and veiled women, engulfed in black robes, float like specters to the marketplace. Old it may be, but never dead or even sleeping. Its streets teem with people and its highway, the Indian Ocean, bustles with lateen-rigged trading ships riding the wind.

Two miles from town, 60- to 100-foot-high dunes abut on almost deserted beaches bundreds of yards wide, made of spotless beige sand. The beaches seem to go on forever, from the quiet waters of the strait that separates Lamu from the mainland to the crashing surf at the north end of the island. When I had been there a few days, f met an Israeli tourist who had arrived half an hour before. He flung up his arms and shouted joyously, "Lamu is out of this world!" It gets to everybody, like some kind of quick-acting but benevolent drug.

1 first heard of Lamu in Washington, from a much-traveled friend who had spent five years living and working in Kenya. "Go to Lamu," he said, and little more. So, toward the end of a five-week trip to Kenya, f did - avoiding the road that runs for 142 miles north from the coastal town of Malindi to a jetty four miles from Lamu. Fearless and skilled though they are, few Kenyan drivers will attempt it, knowing that kidney-bashing potholes and muddy traps may do them in. A decrepit bus out of Malindi wheezes up to the jetty on alternate days, where a small boat awaits. The trip takes six hours or longer — if Allah wills.

I chose the coward's route, taking a Malindi Airways one-engine, five-seater plane to the airstrip on Lamu's neighbor island, Manda. The 45-minute journey cost $34. The only other passenger was a toothless Arab in a beige robe and embroidered skullcap. We put down oo the single sandy airstrip, no airport but in sight. Immediately, a swarm of 15 men, gab-bling and arguing in Swahili and English, demanded to take my little suitcase. They accompanied me down a path past mangrove swamps, which provide the dark wood used in boats and buildings, to a dock and the dhow.

While drinking in the sight of Lamu town across the water, f vainly attempted to ignore them. "Petley's Inn," said l. The boatmen took me there, just yards from the water on the other side 10 minutes away, and 1 thrust a few Kenyan shillings into somebody's hand.

Petley's Inn proved to be, after the sight of Lamu, the second delight of my arrival. An early 19th-century house of whitewashed stone and carved dark wood, it was exquisitely restored with a glass-walled restaurant built on top of the second floor by a Texan in the mid-die 1970s. There are 15 rooms, and I got the best in the house, a double, for $25 including hreakfast

The room opened on a broad second-story veranda facing the sea. The ceiling was 15 feet high, beamed in mangrove, The door, bed-steads, hureau and standing closet were carved

Croissant Chic Arrives in Los Angeles

by Elizabeth Mehren

OS ANGELES - In the beginning, there was quiche. And gourmands said, let there be crenes.

And lo, there were chocolate chip cookies. And yes, in their wake came butter pecan

And soon, shimmering upon a huttery hori-zon, there arrived: Strawberry croissants. Blueberry croissants. And yes, even as Americans struggle to pronounce the name of these crescent-shaped caloric wonders, they are filling them with ham and cheese ... hroccoli ... raisins ... cinnamon ... apricot ... cream cheese. As this French invasion rolls on, croissants are finding their way into the hearts, bellies and frozen food sections of America. One restaurant chain has created an open-face roastbeef-on-croissant (with mayonnaise, hold the mustard). A major airline serves croissants and Croissant chic has arrived. And that development, in the mind of Los Angeles croissant magnate Richard Mynatt, is cream as a side order to turkey-on-croissant.

Holding forth in the airy new Westwood branch of The Buttery, croissant purist Mynatt proclaimed the only real croissant is a naked croissant. Even his own semisweet filled crois-sants au chocolar, created to satisfy the notorious American sweet tooth, Mynatt said, "are not quite right."

And at the mere mention of veggie-croissants, Mynatt grimaced and turned leafy green. "To a croissant connoisseur," Mynatt said, "that is like putting a spinach souffle inside a cream puff. The man Vogue magazine called the Croissant King of Venice, Calif., the man who wears a gold croissant around his neck, issued an imperial dictum. "If you want your spinach," Mynalt said. "you should have it in a salad."

Never mind that Mynatt actually began his croissant empire in Ocean Park, near Santa Monica, and not in Venice, its artsy neighbor to the south. What Richard Mynatt could not have known two years ago when he brought The Buttery to Main Street was that he was unleashing a croissant monster upon the West

For in short order, Mynatt and company were spending their weekends cranking out 3,000 croissants a day. Trendy Westsiders in tennis togs and designer running ensembles were lining up to buy Mynatt's pastries the minute they popped out of the oven

Richard Mynatt, Los Angeles croissant magnate, with some of his will

And in equally short order, the aroma of fresh-baked croissants was wafting its way around the city, emanating from establishments devoted solely to the appreciation (and commercial distribution) of the croissant.

To savor these elegant French delicacies, croissant consumers find themselves paying prices that often suggest perhaps Cartier him-self had backed them. A plain croissant-shop croissant costs between 60 cents and 80 cents - about twice what it would cost in a plain old American bakery. Fill it with meat and/or cheese, and the price shoots as high as $1.50.

As Mynatt observed, soon after he realized his second Buttery was one of three croissant shops to open in 1980 within a two-block radius in Westwood, home of UCLA, (and with at least two or more just across Wilshire Boulevard). "I think someone must have realized that croissants are hot this year."

To be sure, the smaller, continental bakeries of Los Angeles have been selling croissants as long as bakers have been around to make them. "Prior to 1978, there were others baking croissants in Los Angeles," Mynatt said. "But that was not their specialty."

On weekday mornings in Beverly Mills 300 or so croissants prepared at Middle Riard "sell out instantly," according to instantly, manager Laurence Retourne. On Follows. Saturdays, Retourne said, the number of sants - and the number of custom shoots up to 900 or 1,000. "In the mo from 9 to 11," Retourne said, "our little is so overcrowded with croissants then room for anything else. People have to st around and wait for them to bake."

Angelenos call the little French be "cross-ant" or a "croos-ont." Rein said, and they worry about crossant evin Do they smear it with butter and jam? Do dip it in their coffee? Do they go for that pr liar American invention, the chocolate sant? Or do they tough it out with them unstuffed variety?

Americans, Retourne theorized per croissants as "very French, very anistonal". I think, she said, "they think that by a something French, they're becoming is a higher in their own class."

Sounding Out Burial Tombs in Jordan

by Milt Freudenheim

MMAN, Jordan - Using a magnetic contour map showing local highs and lows of magnetism, archaeologists A from the University of Pennsylvania have located an undisturbed, silt-filled burial cave in Jordan containing artifacts that may illuminate the apparently troubled times in the region between 1200 and 1050 B.C.

The group from the University's Museum of Applied Science Center for Archaeology used a cesium magnetometer to find the cave, which was hidden behind six large boulders. It had been overlooked by grave robbers for 3,000 years, presumably because of the silt that had filled it up.

The find, dating from the early Iron Age, included bowls, lamps, jugs, beer-strainers and chalices, iron and bronze anklets and bracelets, rings, toggle pins, a scarab, a stamp scal and a cylinder scal. Scientists were surprised at the absence of weapons. Skeletons of 225 persons, possibly victims of war or disease, were found in two heaps, men in one, women and children in the other

The trail to the Jordanian artifacts began five years ago when Late Bronze Age pottery showed up on the antiquities market in Amman, the Jordanian capital. The pots were traced to a partially robbed-out burial cave in the northwestern Baq'ah Valley, 12 miles northwest of Amman.

With support from the National Geographic Society, the American Center of Oriental Research in Amman and the Jordanian government, the Pennsylvania group undertook stra-tigraphic diggings in 1977 that indicated to them the likelihood of burial caves hidden in the limestone and sandstone slope along the

They brought soil samples and rocks from the area to a magnetically "quiet" corner of Valley Forge National Park near their Philadelphia home base, where they established background data for the magnetic map. The difference in average magnetic intensity be-tween the silt that had filled some caves and the surrounding rock showed up clearly.

Two years ago, Patrick E. McGovern, director of the museum's Baq'ah Valley project, and his associates marked out a grid and surveyed 8.4 acres, using a magnetometer made to order for the museum. They chose a spot near robbed-out caves that they identified by sifting through the ancient remains in robbers' dumps located downhill from the empty chambers. On a topographical map, they registered pronounced variations in magnetic high and low readings. "These included 25 significant magnetic highs likely to represent filled-in burial caves and six lows that could be unsilted-up caves, easier to excavate," McGovern said. The Pennsylvania group returned to dig ont the most promising site last summer. "Theory was fully borne out by excavation," McGovern said. "A completely undisturbed early Iron Age burial cave was discovered exactly in the area of the magnetic anomaly." It was elliptical, about 15 by 20 feet, at the longest widest points.

"Some of the bracelets and anklets, po made of iron from ancient mines 12 if away, are almost totally noncorroded, Mr. vern said. They contain one-half of one cent carbon, a mild steel, that seems to been intentionally made. We have earlie amples of ironworking and smelting buff are among the earliest steel artifacts found.'

Remains of kneecaps and craniums of of the skeletons showed they had similar ic traits. "We are looking at the hypothat it is an extended family." McGoregi.
"From indications that the cave was a second at least a century and the presence of viduals, it seems possible that several tions may have been represented. The to permanent settled life at a period when expect a lot of disruption.

This tightly dated burial group prou illuminate a critical time when Bronze Age ture was ending and new peoples, such as Ammonites and Israelites, were energy McGovern said.

The museum group is racing against 20th-century grave robbers and constitution bulldozers that are preparing the site housing project. Bulldozing along the man terraces in the area of the magnetometer vey has revealed as many as 14 potential car four of which coincide with magnetic in McGovern said.

Higher French Tax Threatens Brandies

by Sam Perkins

OGNAC, France - A newly increased tax on spirits may profoundly affect brandy-making in all parts of

While the higher tax that took effect Feb. 1 will have little effect on exported brandies, which are shipped duty-free from France, it strikes hard at the small firms and producers who sell products on the local market. According to one Armagnac producer in La

Bastide Armagnac, Jean Lacourtoisie, the tax increase will make Armagnac production "financially impossible" for the smaller growers of his area, many of whom will convert their vineyards to more profitable crops. such as corn.

The origin of the higher brandy tax goes back to February. 1980, when the EEC court in Luxembourg ruled in favor of British whiskey-makers who claimed that the French were over-taxing whiskey as compared with similar French products, i.e., brandies. Under EEC regulations such protectionist tax measures are considered illegal.

Under the old system of taxation, whiskey, gin, volka and anise-hased drinks (pastis) paid the highest alcohol tax, 7.655 francs per hectoliter of pure alcohol, while brandies and liqueurs were taxed at 5.125 francs per hectoliter. Under the law passed in December, the tax on hrandies and liqueurs will be brought in line with that on anise products and whiskies. This represents a 49 percent jump in the bran-dy tax, and it has been estimated that it will add 20 percent to the price of moderately

The passage of the tax measure was preceded by a long and acrimonious debate in the French National Assembly between the partisans for hrandy and those for pastis. One defender of the tax was shouted down as a "toady" of the pastis makers. Francois Hardy, representative from Charente, called the tax an "assassination" of cognac.

The debate centered on the fact that the hrandy-makers were to shoulder the entire burden of the Luxembourg court ruling. To satisfy the EEC. Hardy suggested, why not lower the tax on whiskey so that French brandy could meet it half way? The loss in tax revenue that this implied could be made up hy increasing the tax on other French spirits,

"Aberrant?" cried Jean Ricard, president of the multinational Pernod-Ricard company, France's largest pastis maker and largest ex-porter. France would be the only country in the world to penalize its own beverages."

An ad-boc committee for the "Defense of National Beverages" was formed and a largescale campaign of pamphleting and lobbying began on behalf of pastis. The signal slogan to rally the troops was that France was being "colonized by whiskey."

The tax could not have come at a worse time for the brandy market. In the last year global sales of cognac dropped 7 percent, those of the Armagnac market dropped 1 percent after registering steady increases of 7 percent a year; and calvados sales dropped 5.5 percent. Because the tax is based on alcoholie content rather than value, the biggest losers proportionately will be the producers of the lowerpriced hrandies. The tax at a per bottle rate will jump from 14.33 francs per 70-centiliter bottle (usually 40 percent alcohol) to 21.33 francs per bottle — or from about $3 to $4.50. On top of this the customer will pay a 17 per-cent Value Added Tax, bringing the total in-crease to about $2 per bottle. This is a far greater amount in relative terms for the $9 bottle of three-star cognac or simple calvados than for the $29 bottle of VSOP. A spokesman for Courvoisier said that a bottle of their Trois Etoiles Luxe cognac would increase from 55 to 62 francs a bottle — from about $12 to about $13.50. At Hennessy a bottle of Napoleon co-gnac that sold for about $16 will jump to Armagnac and calvados will be especially vulnerable to the tax increase as they sell respectively 50 percent and 80 percent of their production in France. Cognac, on the other hand, sells 80 percent to foreign markets, and the top five cognac firms (Martell, Henri Courvoisier, Remy-Martin and Camus) sell 90 percent of their cognac abroad. In domestic sales as well, the top five occupy a large part of the high-priced market — which is least likely to suffer from the higher prices. The small peasant distillers who sell their hrandies to the large firms and to private customers will be harder pressed than ever to make ends meet.

A great deal is at stake for the pastis makers as well. While pastis has been the largest selling aperitif in France for years (123 million liters in 1979), sales have not grown appreci-ably since 1974. Pastis makers have been slow to conquer foreign markets, selling only 17 percent of their production abroad. An attempt to remedy this has been made by the

In addition plans are under way to the the markets in South America, beginning Brazil, and the Far East. scattered collections. The oversight has been made good by Hannover's Kestner-Gesell-schaft, with a double-barreled exhibition one of paintings and sculptures, the other of more than 100 drawings borrowed largely from the artist.

This first European retrospective dramatically reveals the intellectual and gestural com-plexity of Rivers' work — qualities that are, perhaps, too little apparent even to an American audience, conditioned to respond in terms of its frequent reliance on Pop Art iconography. Viewers familiar only with his para-phrases of Rembrandt via the Dutch Masters cigar-box label, or of Leutze's "Washington Crossing the Delaware," may well be surprised to see the intensity of structural and tonal analysis that precedes them.

Through books and postcards and posters, numerous celebrated paintings have been made visual cliches, and their new-found banality has intrigued artists like Lichtenstein and Warhol. Rivers' exploration of such images has quite another function: to restore the work to a fine arts context. Thus, rather than concealing the manual gesture, Rivers cele-brates it, striving to evoke the vitality the origi-nal possessed before it was embalmed in a

Similarly, his drawings and paintings of cig-arette packages continuously allude to the manual process through which they were formed, and not merely to the printing process through which they were mass-produced.

Throughout Rivers' work runs a continuous dialogue — with the art of the past, with his contemporaries, with history and family. Growing up as Larry Grossberg in a Yiddish-speaking family in the Bronx, he learned his first lessons about communicating across barriers of time, culture and language. In his early drawings, the figure of his mother plays a role reminiscent of that which Arshile Gorky's mother played in his imagination.

Family photographs from Russia and Poland, others from the Bronx, provided raw ma-terial for the act of transformation central to Rivers' art; so, too, did Bonnard and Rubens and David. Rivers admires Leonard Bernstein because he, too, has mastered the masters, yet stands with one foot on the Broadway musical

As a young jazz musician, Rivers began a romance with the Impressionists, but his first significant training came in the New York stu-dio of Hans Hofmann, the guru of abstractionism. Despite his teacher's disapproval. Rivers

The questioning that goes on in the drawings continues in the canvases - the best of which seem to seek to pierce the riddle of how line and color and mass are transformed into art. Extending those explorations into the third dimension, he has worked with the medium of the relief more effectively than any other contemporary artist, though his ventures into sculpture-in-the-round sometimes go as-

by Souren Melikian

ARIS — Paris could make it. This was demonstrated on Thursday at Drouot by the sale of European ceramics from the 17th to the early 19th century taken in turns by Paul Pescheteau and Chantal Pescheteau-Badin, his daughter and partner. They were assisted by the experts Fierre Van-dermeersch and his son Michel, who also runs a gallery dealing in the field on the quai Vol-taire. Their role was crucial.

Like a few other Parisian dealers of the old school literally born in the trade and trained from early childhood to handle objects, the Vandermeerschs, father and son, know their job inside out. At the same time they have a slightly old-fashioned approach to it — even the businesslike and modern-minded Michel Vandermeersch — which leaves its stamp on Vandermeersch — which leaves its stamp on their cataloguing. It combines a high degree of connoisseurship that can only result from daily confrontation with objects and a good deal of indifference to detailed description. Theirs is a terse style, characterizing school, period and type, even volunteering statements as to condition, but mostly skipping references to literature and comparable pieces. It lacks the pseudo-scholarly paraphernalis that has become a must in modern auctions. must in modern auctions.

On the other hand the experts know what is what. They are the kind of people who are unlikely to go wrong about obscure local workshops in France. They will point out that a certain type of early 19th-century plate from the northern French workshop at Les Islettes is rare — where most of their colleagues would just see a bird-and-blossom pattern — and get 6,960 francs for it.

They will display a certain sloppiness in not looking up the New Testament to check precisely which scene is illustrated in blue and white on a Delft scalloped plaque where the reference to chapter and verse is actually stated as "Luc 17 12-14." The buyer can do it, seems to be their suggestion. Indeed that did not prevent the piece from selling for 12,100 francs — a huge price for something that is not in great demand nor a unique piece of its kind. Occasionally they might miss out on a piece or two - as does everyone else. A two-handled pot resting on three stumpy legs was entered in the catalog as "Delft...decorated with a monogram (undeciphered by them). Bears ini-tials S.W. and is dated 1707." Reference was cryptically made to "Helbig vol. I p. 161 number 116." This is clearly a major piece both because it is dated and because the crest painted over the interlaced initials of two names must commemorate some princely marriage. Jacob Stodel of Amsterdam, one of the foremost dealers in Holland, grabbed it at only 8,300 francs, making it the best bargain in the sale — by far. No doubt, it will soon resurface at a considerably higher price.

Apart from connoisseurs, the Vander-metrsch enjoy that other advantage which puts them on a par with the best service that may be offered by Christie's or Sotheby's — they know every one in the dealing and collecting world and they know what each one of them is after. Looking around the room was highly re-vealing: There were all the faces one usually sees at London auctions - Jacob Stodel from Amsterdam, Vandekar from London and Georges Segal from Bale.

The prices fetched by the finest 18th-century pieces of German porcelain were international prices. Early porcelain from the Meissen workshop went through the roof as it has been doing in London in recent months. A large circular bowl decorated with a genre scene painted about 1735 by C.F. Herold and carrying the crossed swords mark was bought for 121,570 francs by an English connoisseur, while the matching piece went to George Segal for 138,070 francs. An octagonal teapot considered by those who admire early Meissen to be the finest was pushed up to 27,000 francs by the English connoisseur Anthony du Boulay. At 30,000 francs Vandekar looked sad and gave up. It finally went to Segal at 62,170. Yet, the overall price structure was not exactly the same as it would have been at a Lon don sale. On one hand, prices were often higher at the bottom end. This is due to one of the many differences between Paris and London auctions any day. Paris sales are attended by large numbers of nonprofessionals — idle onlookers who get the itch to buy something. The other category that sold better than it would elsewhere was of course French provincial faicnce of the 18th century because it is known so much better by the French them-selves — unlike French 18th-century porcelain. which is well known internationally.

But a third category which matters a lot for the overall commercial success of any kind of anction did not do quite as well as it would in London. It may be loosely characterized as very good quality wares that do not fall in the class of museum buys and require an atmos-phere of intense international competition to reach their maximum potential price. Part of an 18th-century Frankenthal service sold piecemeal might have made more in London. I saw a little-known German collector, Grueber, acquiring some of the finer pieces all with the mark of the great Paul Hannong — two lovely plates, 3,712 francs; a sauce-boat 2,900, etc.

While Thursday's excellent, highly satisfactory auction demonstrated that Paris has a potential, small defects also pointed up what is defeating it. For example, the catalog came out in mid-January, reaching foreigners only 10 days before the sale — which is a good 10 days too late. And there weren't any copies left on the day of the sale.

OME — In 1810 a group of German painters in their early 20s rented some rooms together in the empty convent of San Isidoro. Wrapped in long capes and accompanied by their mastiffs, they roamed the streets of Rome in earnest debate or silent observation. Because they wore their hair long and parted in the middle, the people micknamed them "Nazarenes." They called themselves brothers of the "Lukasbund" - the league of St. Luke, the patron

They were a commune of rebels. They had reacted against the rigidity of the academy, its chiaroscuro coloring, its copying from plaster casts, its reconstruction of classic scenes and its unqualified adoration and misunderstanding of the antique.

In the great outdoors of Italy, in daily contact with the common people in the orchards and wine shops of Rome, they imagined themscives in Arcadia, while they were inspired by the genuine simplicity expressed in the panels of the Italian medieval painters and the devotion and faultless application they found in

Coming from comfortable middle- and upper-class backgrounds, they here led a very fru-gal and well-regulated existence, posing for each other, sharing their models, painting trescoes in unison and together working out their artistic and ethical problems. Protestants all, they eventually converted to Catholicism.

Their paintings at the Galleria Nazionale d'Arte Moderna in Valle Giulia until March 22, are chaste, sweet and heavy. Everything is glazed with noble sentiment and earnest mo-rality. Faith has always been a driving force in art but here something has gone wrong, relig-ion seems to be about cleanliness, demure acceptance, discipline even. Young peasant women are virginal, madonnas and angels are polished marble, while the painters in their self-portraits are virtuously self-critical. That they fancied themselves living among naive people contented with their lot in an ideal countryside, and that they were blind to the real muddle, misery and ignorance in an aucient city depleted by centuries of invasions and a voracious papacy and aristocracy, may account for the stilted sensibility of these expa-J.F. These "pre-Pre-Raphaelites" as they ought to be called, were willfully plain, circumspect and heavy-handed. Only at their dreamiest, most fairy-talclike - as in F.T. Horny - or at their most harshly realistic, as in V.E. Janssen - do they make an impact on the modern viewer. Their lives — an attempt at an artist's commune that lasted the extraordinary length of two decades - are more interesting than their work.

The comprehensive and superbly installed exhibition was organized in collaboration with West German anthorities and the Staedelsches Kunstinstitut of Frankfort-on-Main Modern art anyone? Ettore Colla was one of the first sculptors in Italy after World War II to use discarded materials - old machine parts, boilers, grates, gearboxes, etc. - for his stark abstact constructions. trakor Gallery in Via dei Pianellari 20, until Feb. 28, is didactic in the best sense of the word; it consists of the late Colla's drawings, schematic renderings and designs, and some of his sculptural elements — nuts, bolts, sickles, pliers and pipes and other bits left in his studio neatly arranged, and several of the completed sculptures, themselves dark, stern presences.

One of the leading young abstractionists here, Carmengloria Morales, belonging to a direction called "Pittura Pittura" or "pure painting," is showing her recent work at Primo Piano Gallery, Via Vittoria 32 until Feb. 28. She has always placed two converse part to each has always placed two canvases next to each other, one covered with a dense criss-cross of marks in sober color, the other thinly painted or bare. Her new diptychs make her meaning plain

In these juxtapositions one canvas is agitated with the fat strokes of a loaded housepainter's brush almost a foot wide, in various contrasting colors, which works vividly against its pale and honed down counterpart, but at the same time complementing it. If Morales' previous statement was somewhat too hermetic and pure, she has now felicitously changed to a more outgoing and opulent manner.

Four men of an even younger generation, connected with what has been dubbed a kind of neoprimitivism and requoting of yesterday's art, present one work each at the Ugo Ferranti Gallery in Via Tor Millina 26 until Feb. 28. Ceccobelli is the most inventive, lining up four metal-mesh bedsteads on the wall like so many canvases and painting wide action-painting-like brushstrokes across the whole assemblage. Dessi pierces his canvas in the middle and surrounds this navel with symbolic markings and scars. Bianchi presents a larger version in oils of his small watercolor abstractions. Gallo's twin panels owe a lot to abstract expression ism, whether he is aware of it or not. All this is put together under the title "Why?" making the show an easy target for uncharitable com

There are two other, rehingly quiet hostelries — Peponi's, Danish-ned, small and inviting and two miles away n town in beach territory, and Ras Kitau oss the water. The latter, although rustic attractive, is truly out of it all on the facisland of Manda and reachable only by At, a considerable drawback. Both are some at more expensive than Petley's. The food Peponi's was the most delicious I tasted on mu: vegetable soup, delicately fried local 2, crisp, golden french fries and a lemon " niffle" that was really a lemon froth.

The mass of young, intrepid tourists — and they comprised virtually all the 200 foreigners visiting Lamu when I was there — vanished at night into lodgings in the back streets of town, clean but rather primitive and costing $1 to $2.50 a night. Those I spoke to had no complaints about their digs.

A word about the tourists. The jet set never got to Lamu: there are no glamorous things to do. There was an influx of hippies years ago, and then they went away. The young people who come to Lamu now come from Britain, France, Scandinavia, Germany and, to a lesses extent, the United States.

Peponi's and Petley's were the congregating points for these travelers, and the long, rambling conversations I had with them were among the most memorable aspects of my stay in Lamu. The waterfront and Lamu's shopping street, perhaps three yards wide, one block back from the sea and parallel to it, were delights that drew me every day. People streamed along these narrow thoroughlares, marketing, chatting snacking on sweet delicacies hawked at stands and drinking strong coffee with

To the right of Petley's Inn, as you stand with your back to the sea, is the Lamu Museum, a celebration of the Lamu and Bajum cultures, containing exhibits of carved doors and chests, antique ebony thrones inlaid with bone and ivory, rich costumes, embossed and incised in silver, long canoes and dhows and sivas — great horns of ivory or brass, jealously guarded symbols of kingship usually sounded only on state occasions.

Petley's and the museum are the handsomest of Lamu's half dozen restored waterfront mansions, most dating from the 18th or early 19th centuries. All white and square, with arched verandas and dark, carved wood detail in shutters and balustrades, they are definitely Arah in feeling, giving Lamu the look of a Cas-

The history of Lamu is murky; one claim is that the Arabs founded the town in the 7th century. Lamu and its neighboring large islands of Manda and Pate were all sites of semiindependent sultanates, constantly at war with one another and the much bigger city-state of Mombasa, 150 miles down the coast. The armies of Mombasa and Manda centuries ago joined to invade Lamu but, to their astonishment, Lamu's minute army defeated them in the battle of Shela, the hamlet that still stands behind Peponi's.

In the 18th century, the town's Golden Age, many of the better waterfront residences were built. Rich men, clad in silks and turbans, lived in stone houses of far greater size and elegance than were found anywhere else on the East African coast, except for 19th-century Zanzibar. Late 19th-century Lamu thrived like Malindi on slave-worked estates until slavery was ontlawed in 1907.

Now it is sinking into gentle decrepitude with its ancient trades intact: fishing, the building of dhows and the cutting and transporting by sea of manarove wood.

30-Second Art Exhibits, and Others

ARIS — One thing you discover, once you have been visiting art galleries for some time, is that there are shows that you can take in in 30 seconds or less without feeling that you have missed anything essential. They are not absolutely devoid of interest or significance — in fact they may be extremely significant in a sociological sense but we realize that all there is to see is instantly

This is paradoxical, but it has become so commonplace that we are no longer aware of it. The paradox can be expressed in the follow-ing terms: The artist is widely supposed to be the mythic figure of individuality and his work, I suggest, is supposed to express the deeply private, individual, unrationalized relationship to life as a "mystery" that is neither lost nor found.

Yet here, in the case of the 30-second gallery show I just mentioned, we have a work that is quite the contrary of something "deeply pri-vate, individual and unrational," something that is obviously founded on a conventional, rationalized base thanks to which it can be instantly understood. So the outcome of this contradiction is that we have the authentically conventional masquerading as the authentically private, as the unconventional, and a rationalized statement trying to look like a form of relationship to experience that must necessarily come before any kind of rationality.

This is obviously not accidental, and it has its roots in social conditions, but it means that much of what we refer to as art (because it would be cranky to do otherwise) has nothing to do with the role that we still expect the artist to play by figuring the most intensely immediate and unrationalized vision one man can conceivably have.

A prevalent critical view treats art as a sort of collective experiment leading to collectively recognized "correct solutions" which are, in comparison to authentic solutions, like accepted behavior defined by Emily Post as compared to authentic behavior.

Jerzy Stajuda drawing.

The accepted "correct solutions" are therefore structures of inverted rationality. Turn rationality inside out and you will have the absurd, but in no case will you have the burning intensity of unmediated, unrationalized reality which, I imagine, art is trying to catch in its emerging freshness.

The 30-second show is so easy to understand because it speaks to the mind directly, to the intellect, in a language which has already been structured and codified, even if it expresses the inverted rationality of the absurd.

These thoughts were prompted by an exhibition of drawings, watercolors and paintings by Jezzy Stajuda (at the Galerie Valmay, 22 Rue de Seine, Paris 6, to Feb. 28). Stajuda's show is not one of the 30-second variety. Some of his works may speak to any one person more distinctly than others, but when you stop in front of one a form of dialogue ensues. They are not spectacular works on the whole, in the sense that they speak in a subdued, even a delicate, register. One is not quite sure what they are presenting, although there is a suggestion of space (and even, occasionally, of architecture) though in an abstract (or more accurately a not-at-all concrete) form. These works are not instantly intelligible, and one can stand in front of this or that one for long minutes in what can figuratively be described as a dialogue. Stajuda's main theme, to the extent that such a word makes sense here, seems to be snace, and his space is ambiguously mobile, constantly foiling our attempts to pin it down.

Speaking of his show at the same gallery two years ago I concluded that, "He is a sensitive colorist and his lines, with their secure and mild authority, project a space beyond formulation that he finds nestled, nonetheless, at the center of here and now." This still applies and, if anything, he has gained in quiet assurance in the interval. Other exhibitions in Paris include a delight ful one at the Musee des Arts et Traditions Populaires (6 Route du Mahatma Gandhi, Paris 16, to April 19) devoted to the instruments of folk music, their customs and symbolism. As is usual in this excellently conceived museum. the show is well presented, and one can fortunately hear all the instruments thanks to recordings piped in above each showcase. Starting out with bells and clappers connected with religious ceremonies, and with the shofar, one of the most venerably ancient instruments in existence, the show goes on to the bagpipe and the hurdy-gurdy (an instrument on which the strings are sounded by a turning wheel, and which sounds like a cousin to the bagpipe), the violin, the cither, the guitar, the drum, the serpent, the pipe, the flute, the rhomb, the Jew's barp, the accordion and the barrel organ, to mention but a few. A number of workshops, concerts and debates are planned during the show.

The Galerie Lucien Durand (19 Rue Mazarine, Paris 6, to Feb. 21) is presenting recent paintings by Herman Braun, a clever series of portraits of artists. Velicovic, Aillaud, Arroyo, Erro, etc., are presented against a background in the style of their own work.

The Galerie Isy Brachot, (35 Rue Guene-gaud, Paris 6, to March 7) is showing recent watercolors by Yugoslav painter Linba, all in the familiar vein of an erotic apocalypse. Liuba's craft is good, his view of a crumbling world a bit too luscious to be true.

N.Y. Prices Higher on Rate Hopes

Agency Dispatches NEW YORK — Indications that interest rites may ease combined with a positive response to President Rengan's economic message to lift New York Stock Exchange prices Feiday in moderate trading. Several major banks cut their broker loan rates Friday to 1812 percent from 19 percent. Broker rate changes often procede changes in the prime rate. Analysts also said Mr. Reagan's speech Thurs-day night was well raceived for its tone, although it contained no specifics of his economic plans.

The Dow Jones industrial average climbed 5.54 points to close at 952.30. Advances led declines, 793-598, as turnover rose to 46 million shares from the 45.3 million traded Thursday.

The Federal Reserve reported Friday that MI-A, the nation's bariday that M1-A, the nation's basic money supply measurement, fell to a seasonally-adjusted average of $367.3 billion from $370.6 billion in the week ended Jan. 28. M1-B, the broader measure of the money supply, dropped $2.6 billion in the week to $143.4 billion.

The Fed Open Market Committee raised the short-term growth target for MI-A to an annual rate of 414 percent from 21/2 percent at its meeting Dec. 18 and 19, minutes of the meeting showed. But the panel tightened its other mooey growth targets, reducing the M1-B growth target to 4% percent from the 5 percent in effect.

Morgan Gnaranty Trust led the move to a lower broker loan rate. Earlier in the week, most major banks, including Morgan, cut their prime rates to 1942 percent from 20

Citibank left its prime rate unchanged Friday morning at 19½ percent but said it would review the rate again Tuesday. It will set its prime for the week on Tuesdays from now on.

The market pulled back a bit in the final hour, as it often does on Friday before release of the weekly banking figures, However, analysts do not expect the Fed will let rates fall too quickly.

Analysts said that some investors were encouraged that the nation's January memployment rate, reported Friday, was unchanged from December's 7.4 percent level. ter four creditor banks themselves went bankrupt, leaving state-owned Argentine banks with more

Meanwhile, President Valery

Giscard d'Estaing of France, after talks with Chancellor Helmnt Schmidt of West Germany, said in Paris Friday that their countries were determined to maintain the stability of the European Monetary System, where the DM's weakness has caused strains because EMS members have to keep their currencies close together. He said that the EMS had produced "very positive" results since its creation two years ago.

But there was agreement that the markets were greatly affected by remarks Thursday from Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker in congressional testimony. His statement that U.S. interest rates might go even higher in the coming months started a scramble for dollars in Europe Friday morning, London dealers said. High U.S. interest rates have been seen as a major factor in attraction investors to the dollar. Mr. Schmidt made no direct comment in Paris on the EMS or the recent weakness of the mark, but he said he agreed with Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's remarks.

Broadcasters Seek to Jam Satellite Plan

By Merrill Brown

Washington Pout Service
WASHINGTON — The television industry in the United States, continuing a bitter battle with the government over the future of new technologies, has urged the Federal Communications Commission to delay granting Communications Satellite Corp. authorization to provide satellite service to homes. The delay in Comsat's $680-million plan to introduce Direct Broadcast Satellite services was re-quested in comments filed this week with the FCC by the nation's three major television networks, the National Association of Broadcasters and a variety of other industry groups. "Io short, the interim authorization would reflect imprudent, capricious rulemaking," the broadcasters group said.

At issue is an ambitious propos-al by a Comsat subsidiary, Satellite Television Corp., to offer to millions of homes three oew networks via the nation's first television hookup from satellites to homes. Under the plan, consumers would install small receiving dishes atop their homes that would catch satellite signals and convert them into conventional television signals.

said in its comments.

But there is no formal regulatory system for handling the Direct Broadcast Satellite technology, although Comsat is arguing for in-terim authority to begin develop-ing the system. The FCC is consid-ering the issue on two fronts, a proceeding on the Comsat authorization and a broader look at the entire issue. Because the new service will need to use part of the satellite broadcasting spectrum, the broadcasting industry is arguing against introduction of the unprecedented system at a time when communications policy-makers and a yet-un-named FCC advisory committee are beginning to grapple with key spectrum-allocation issues to be addressed at a 1983 regional radio

CBS Inc., for instance, noted that the spectrum slots sought by Comsat for the service provide "a rare occurrence in this age of rap-idly accelerating services," and that the space should be used for "oew and innovative services such as high-definition television,"

"CBS believes that it is unwise to authorize one entity to utilize, on any 'interim' or other basis, what could amount to 30 percent of the optimum United States broadcast satellite services space without further study, the network The National Association of Broadcaster, the industry's leading lobbying arm, sounded a similar warning noting that anthorizing Direct Broadcast Satellite before long-range policy on spectrum al-location is developed "would constitute a rush to judgment with po-tentially irreparable consequenc-

Comsat's opponents further ar-gue that granting interim authorization for the service will give the go-ahead for a massive expendi-ture that would be difficult to reverse and, as CBS argued, would "determine the course" of the technology in the future.

Comsat has told the FCC that, light of the rapid development of technologies such as cable television, its venture should be allowed to get off the ground before the market for video services is further dispersed.

None of the 14 new cars produced in Japan since last summer have been authorized for sale in France, and French importers and the Japanese allege that the gov-ernment has deliberately held them up at French ports, although safety tests for the models have been successfully completed.

The Japanese government said Thursday it would investigate the allegation, which has also been made by Japanese trade officials.

that Flooded Markets

Fast-growing companies in breakoway industries—covered weekly in the comprehersive Capital Offshore reports—have been paying little attention to reposted Wall Street sell signals and storm warnings. Immediately after a widely followed analyst flashed a "sell-everything" signal on the eversing of January 6, Capital Offshore stated that many great growth buys would never be seen again at bargain levels which they hit the next marning. Within firms weeks, contemporary recommendations Paradyne in highspeed data communications and NBI in paperless office technology had dimbed almost a dazen points from lows reached on January 7 when thousands of investors were convinced the whole market was ready to head downhill. Paradyne on the AMEX had dimbed from $26% to $37½ while NBI on the O-T-C market was up from $57½ to $69. In mid January, Capital Offishare began expanding coverage of features in biotechnology—depressed when much of Wall Street turned prematurely sour on such factors as Genetach in recombinant DNA. How General, which produces interferon in lab-grown cells, had bottomed during the January 7 praise at $27% and was soon at a new high of $35%. Bio-Rad, a producer of biological materials, a los shot to new highs of $35% to factors including Cubic, Harris and Raytheon which have applied strategic military skills to burgeoning commercial and industrial rechnologies. Some of the above stacls, were

Britain's Bungling Spanish Waiter

Takes on an Italian Accent in Spain

LONDON — Being from Barcelona will no longer suffice as an excuse for the dropped dishes and mangled English of Manuel, the bungling waiter from the British television series Fawlty Towers.

As far as Spanish television, which has bought the series, is concerned, Manuel is Marco and hails from Italy.

Fawity Towers stars British comedien John Cleese, but Andrew Sachs who plays Manuel has a large following of his own.

At first, Mr. Sachs said that it all sounded rather silly. "I can't think why the Spanish should be ashamed of Manuel. He's got all the ingredients of the kind of waiter who makes a holiday in Spain memorable."

But, on reflection he said, it is logical. "The waiter has problems with the language, and if the series is dubbed into Spanish, you can hardly

According to press reports, the leading Madrid newspaper El Pais said in its TV column, "The censors under Franco were cruder, but those of today are not far helpind."

Turning Manuel into Marco, an Italian waiter, creates no problems for Italy. The Italians also bought the series, and for them Manuel stays

Some critics were not so charitable.

SOLOMON & SHEBA" was and the disestablishment of the female sex.

According to Sheba, whose tion, for which we should be thrashed. It is as if Preston Sturges had decided to take on the Old Testament. Here is Sheba, queen of the south, asking those important questions in the presence of Solomon, who has just about had it with his lazy Egyptian wife: "So how are you, king?" Sheba says.

"I'm good," answers Solomon. "Understanding. Bring my wisdom to bear. The important thing is justice. How justice is in my kingdom, that's how I am." It occurs to Sheba that Solomon is somewhat pompous. She likes him anyway. Justice may be the definition of well-being for the king of Israel, who is busy trying to decipher the secret of the py-ramids in order to finish his temple; love is the definition of wellbeing for the queen of Sheba, on an economic mission — by ele-phant and camel — that will cost her the matriarchy. Solomon will certainly enjoy Sheba, but then Sheba will also enjoy Hiram, the architect of the temple, and Solomon most emphatically will not enjoy contemplating the fact of Hiram and Sheba. Clearly, in this funny and moving novel, some liberties have been taken with the Old and New Testaments, the Talmud, the Koran, Sufism and arcane Masonic lore. Faye Levine, who has written for magazines as various as the Atlantic Monthly, Rolling Stone and Penthouse, shreds her research and weaves a whole new

We are advised that "Solomon and his scribes were undeniably powerful controllers of the media," that Pharbis loved Moses "before he got into Jewish liberation," that sbebans when it comes to sex "do it in groups," that the king of Tyre, commending human sacrifice, told Solomon "trust me on this," and that the old priest Ahiathar, in "suburban exile," explained to Solomon that "I don't get into town much anymore" but could nevertheless, guarantee, that "certain theless guarantee that "certain things would be taken off the

This checkiness consorts quite happily with special knowledge. because it was the creature of oneness" instead of a duality: "And love, that is her god, that is his devil, emanates in a fine mist from a priest's hut, from a striped Sheban tent, from a granite and limestone temple too intricately perfect to survive crude history, till it reaches the pooks and crannies of monks' hrains bending over gold-lettered manuscripts and freezes again into stone on the greatest cathedrals." Poets and warriors, "shameless and lustful," teach us that "the trees are older than the earth." Snakes are abolished. Sheba, pregnant, "moved as if inside her the infant were a great cat, restlessly stalking its escape." Her son will "string his harp with arrows. Well, "Solomon & Sheba" is a harp strung with arrows. We have no way of knowing which ques-tions Sheha asked of Solomon, but Levine turns their moon-haunted tryst into a dialectic of love and justice, of geometry and sacrifice, of dams and temples, of the wis-dom of sex against the wisdom of power. She says: "But we know that hirds do not live in our universe; they live in beaven, and experience nothing but emotion, and know nothing but the ascent and descent of angels." There are also horses and lions.

In betraying matriarchy — her son will be a king — Sheba betrays feminism. It is astonishing that Levine has managed to make this apocalypse laughable, heroic and ohvious, as though the conversation in our bedroom depended on a nostalgia for the prehistoric and we were waiting for the unicorn to forgive us. What a splendid first novel, and how nice it is to have stayed in print long enough to be noticed by someone who didn't do his job the first time around.

Rubens' Works Clue to Disease The Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP) - The swollen knuckles and wrists of many sub-jects in portraits by Flemish master Peter Paul Rubens appear to be symptoms of rheumatoid arthritis, a finding that means the disease is centuries older than previously be-lieved, medical experts say.

The disease had been associated with modern life because there had been no evidence of it before the 19th century. But the hands por-trayed in Rubens' work has led medical sleaths to speculate that the development of rheumatoid arthritis had little to do with environmental changes triggered by the Industrial Revolution.

Four arthritis experts surveyed the later paintings by Rubens and published their findings in the the Journal of the American Medical Association. In works from the last 30 years of Rubens' life, they noted the same lesions, swollen hand and wrist joints familiar to

Reputation Confirmed

Home advantage in Five Nations rugby is often mentioned but rarely illustrated with statistics, yet the stats can be computed and they are interesting. In the '70s, for instance, home teams scored 58 percent of all points.

The figures by country - points at home as percentages of each country's total points — are re-markably uniform in four cases, and confirm, in the fifth, the reputation of the Irish as good tra-velers: France 62, Scotland and Wales 60, England 59, Ireland 49. In the '60s and 70s, Wales and Scotland met 10 times in Cardiff and 10 times in Edinburgh The and 10 times in Edinburgh. NEW YORK - When Eamonn Coghlan was 11, he joined the Metropolitan Harriers in Dublin because he thought it would please his father, who had been a numer in his youth and was active as a track and field official io later years. On his first day in the club, there was a one-mile cross-country race Eamonn wanted to enter.

"Not your first day," they told him. "You do some jogging and train with us and we'll decide when you're ready to race."

"They say Yifter is between 35 and 40," Coghlan said. "so I've got two more Olympics to try for a gold." Coghlan is 28, will be rising 32 in 1984 and 36 in 1988.

Coghlan may be the greatest in-door miler of them all. Up to this winter he had won something like 27 of 29 races on boards but he had lost twice in three starts this wioter. At East Tennessee, in his first race of the season, he was fourth to Steve Scott, who did 3:54. At the Sunkist Invitational in Los Angeles Scott hit 3:53.7 and Coghlan was second at 3:54.4. Then Coghlan won at Dallas in 3:55.5.

"So I'm ready," he said, on the eve of hooking Scott, John Walker, Filbert Bayi of Tanzania, Dr. Thomas Wessinghage and Harald Hudak from West Germany, Ray Flynn of Ireland and Craig Masback (Princeton and Oxford), in the Millrose.

"Eamonn Coghlan is a master of the boards," said Scott after the Los Angeles race, "so any time you beat him it's a tremendous accomplishment. Coghlan read that and smiled. He loves it when his opponents psych themselves.

Soviet Skater Takes Title

The Associated Press
INNSBRUCK, Austria — Igor
Bobrin of the Soviet Union became the European men's figure skating champion Thursday after a spectacular free-skating perform-place to clinch the gold medal with a flashy free-skating program that included five triple loops: The silver medal went to Jean-Christoph Simond of France and the bronze to Norbert Schramm of West Ger-

Hermann Schulz of East Germa oy, who had been leading in the men's championship before the free-skating competition, dropped

Bobrin, a 27-year-old from Len-ingrad, placed fifth in last year's European championships and sixth at the Lake Placid Winter Olympics.

Twice a victor and twice a runner-up, Weirather is tied with Steve Podbordski of Canada at the top of the downhill standings with two races remaining. "I've trained the whole year, and so I've always had the idea of winning the down-hill championship," Weirather said Friday after a difficult training run in steadily falling snow. "I only like downhill But I've trained a lot of giant slalom to help me with my tour two years later he managed an 11th place in Lake Placid. When in December, 1979, he opened the World Cup circus with a fifth place in Val d'Isere, France, Austrians began to take him seriously. Before the season ended he bad placed second in both Kitzbuehel and Lake Louise, Alta.,

The weather, unfortunately, is getting some attention from Podborski, who by his own admission is always ready to copy a winner.

"His technique has been essentially the same for the last few years," Podborski said of Weirath-

er. "It's somewhat similar to mine - very controlled, studied and aggressive. He's always going in the direction he wants to go. His arms are going that way. His head and his whole body move that way. It's different from, say, Franz Klammer, whose arms are wild and always flinging around.

This direction makes you go faster, because there are no conflicting movements. He has the lat-est technique in downhill, a quiet and directed kind of skiing. It is not outstanding in any particular way. It's just fast. He does some things better than others, and be just takes a little bit of this and a

"Maybe the Carter people lied to you about how many parking places were available in the first place. In that way they could have taken one with them - without your knowing about it."

"I've thought about it, and I've asked the FBI to run a check on the Carter people to find out if they have a parking place some-where else that doesn't belong to them. But the FBI says they have no mandate 10 track down stolen parking places. Besides, there is nothing stamped on a parking place to indicate it is government property.

> This got him very angry. "You would like to think that, because it fits your image of Republicans. But I know many Republicans who are willing to car pool. The only problem is they live in areas where it's very bard to find their own kind to pool with."

"Why doesn't President Reagan freeze everyone's parking place?" I suggested. "That way, no one could get someone else's spot. If someone quits, retires or is fired, you could just put a limousine in its place."

What kind of limousine?" "The ones that are reserved for Mr. Reagan's friends when they OK, I'll tell you why. When the Democrats controlled the government, there were so many employees that most of them parked outside in the streets. As you keep cutung down the size of bureaucracy, more and more employees bave an opportunity to park inside. As soon as one department hears that another department has been elimmated, they immediately take over their parking places."

"That makes sense, but why then aren't there more parking places available outside than there were before?"

"Those places are being taken up by lohbyists. Every time you have a new administration, you find a lot of lohbyists' cars around government hulldings. They have to get to know the new people."

"I hadn't thought of that," he said. "Then you don't think the Carter people took their parking places with them?"

The Divine Miss M.

PARIS — The brazen hussy known as the Divine Miss M. has flaunted herself onstage on several continents and can now be seen in "Divine Madness," a film version of her stage show filmed live on three successive nights in Pasadena, Calif., by director Mi-chael Ritchie and cinematographer William A. Fraker, who used 10 cameras to shoot several miles of film which were later edited down to 94 knockout minutes

She calls "Divine Madness" the time-capsule version of her show: "Besides sheer greed, there was the idea of putting the whole thing to rest." In other words, it's the end. Bette Midler is sick of the complicated routines, of such creations as Dolores DeLa-go, the Toast of Chicago, a foulmouthed egomaniac who careers across the stage in a battery-powered wheelchair while wearing a mermaid's tail, she is sick of the wild cos-tumes (on the world tour she made her entrance dressed as a frankfurter) and above all she is sick of the Divine Miss M.

"She's such a stupid broad," she said. "She could stand an overhaul, she could stand a

What she would really like is to sing only rock 'n' roll. It's easier than dragging around all those costumes — "If I ever have to see one more sequined fishtail!" - and it's less of vocal strain because, she says, "the pain of not producing the sound is not as had." Also, she loves rock. On the other hand Bette Midler likes to talk in symbols and having said she'd like to do a rock tour she adds herself, whoever that may be.

It is not easy, or pertinent, to wonder who her real self is: "I never know how much of what I say is true. If I did I'd be bored to death." death," she wrote in an account of her world tour. But it is easy to see what she is not.
"Trash with flash," "Sleaze with ease," her descriptions of her stage persona, have nothing to do with the quiet, clever offstage Midler who wonders what future generations will think of her ("Sometimes I think I live for the history books, which isn't a lot of the history books. fun") and who looks, with her blond hair pulled back and colorless clothes, as if she had just signed up for night courses at the New School for Social Research.

Missing the Point

She speaks softly and gets annoyed when journalists ask her to tell dirty jokes offstage. She wouldn't dream of it. "They've missed the point," she says.

"I use those jokes onstage because they make me laugh. They're mingated by everything that goes before and after. It's like an analysis of a personality that is a lot of things, part of it is that kind of humor." The jokes link roller-coaster changes of mood and style and above all they help build the com-plicity between Midler and her audience that is one of her most remarkable features. It is the audience that finally calls out for the jokes ("My God, you're cheap," she observes), not she who volunteers them.

"That's it," she says. "They make me tell

To open "Divine Madness" she struts out "Big Noise from Winnetka," showing off her trim ankles and resplendent cleavage with the careful bravado of a woman who hopes to conceal her homelier features. She ends with the ballad "I Shall Be Released."

"It starts out very ridiculous and very high. At the end whoever came out in all that drag ends up in rags. It's a peeling away of the layers, not only of clothes but of emotions. Someone who comes out full of confidence and in the end is screaming to be free. I always comment on what I know best, which is myself and what's amused me. That's always been the idea behind the show - to be an exaggeration at the beginning and a skeleton

She writes much of her material and works on every detail: "We always try lor a motivation, a justification, and if you have a justificarion the intelligence shows through. I love taking the crap out and making it like a Japanese arrangement. I love to edit. My sister, who died in an accident in 1968, was going to be a film editor. I've never said I wanted to be a director - editing is where the fun is, I

based on Janis Joplin, won her an Oscar nomination. "I wanted to do a tour, 'Rose Lives, starting with the ending of the film. I'd like to do 'Rose Goes Bananas,' 'Rose Goes to Viemam' 'Rose Lives, Laughs and Cries.

"I love that character so much. Before that I was never allowed to be melancholic and overwrought. I've always had to temper it with humor." She would like to be a film tragedienne - "I've always loved Anna Magnani, I'd love to be able to chew the scener but allows herself few illusions about the I'm not that enamored of show husiness, she says. "I've been in enough meetings and enough deals to know what it's about."

Feeling the Resentment

She was born in Hawaii of a family that had emigrated from New Jersey: "The only Jewish girl in a Samoan neighborhood," she has cracked. In fact it wasn't that funny to be poor and the only whites. "Human beings resent the way people are different. I felt it every day of my life and I live it every day." When she tried to break into show business in New York it was hippie time, to which she reacted by singing 1930s torch songs: "I wasn't about to go around with flowers in my hair and no hra, I'd look like a little tueboat.

T've never liked groups, I've never liked movements. I've always stood aside. I've never gone to EST, I've never been a Christian, I've never been a hippie. I stand aside and comment, that's what I do."

Charles Ludlum's fringe Theater of the Ri-diculous, with its curious mixtures of periods and styles, helped her get her own act together: "It was all very strange, but it made sense

From freakish success in New York's gay community Bette Midler went on to conquer Broadway and television and then went on a world tour that included Australia ("National dish: Pineapple pizza, National hird: the fly"); London ("The Queen is the whitest woman on earth, she makes the rest of us look Third World"); Munich, where she got an audience of 3.000 to join her in a rude song about Hitler: Antwerp, which, she says, was like the Second Coming, and Paris, which wasn't

"The French are so slick, so refmed. I am a peasant who came from peasants but I aspire to the middle classes. Mick Jagger always says I aspire to the middle classes. It's the constant feeling of being judged, it's enervat-ing. The first time I was here I couldn't make it work. Now I'm rich and famous. Being rich and famous is better with the French." She never reads reviews, having once been so upset by a bad one that she retired for some months. The article made me feel I had no right to work. Up to that time I was full of beans and the greatest thing since sliced bread." She protects herself as she can, knowing that when you get to a certain point someone will cut you down. "I'm not sure when that time will come. I know the pendulum has to swing again and best I am not surprised."
